

PHOTO COURTESY OF ROBERT FOX

Photography by Robert Fox

Robert Fox, a photographer based in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has been taking black and white photographs for over 40 years using traditional silver base materials in a wet darkroom. Currently he is using a variety of cameras depending on the subject matter. This photograph was taken using a 4" x 5" view camera.

About this shot, he says: "There is a magic time just after the sun sets before it is truly dark as the light drifts from the broad source of the sun to the pointillist sources of man. As the light shifts, our attention narrows from a wide view to objects that we recognize as part of our daily experience.

"Viewing our influence on the landscape during this time, we see everyday objects in new ways—as small scenes lit by pools of light, as patterns created by the lights themselves, and relationships that are made visible only when the surrounding clutter is obscured."

"GRAIN BINS AND GASAHOL," BY ROBERT FOX. SILVER-GELATIN PRINT, 2016